

Teacher Handout for Class Response

At least once every week, take a few minutes to write a CLASS RESPONSE. A class response is different from a reading response because you don't have to read something first.

Make your response at least 50 words long, but feel free to write as much as you wish. Below are some questions you may want to address in your response. Answer each question based on how you feel about the week in which you are writing the response.

- How well have you managed your time?
- What activities/assignments have been hard for you? Easy? Explain.
- Who or what has been helpful to you? Hurtful? How?
- What has been enjoyable? What has been dull or boring? Why?
- If you had to grade yourself on your total effort and quality of work this week, what would your grade be? Why?
- What concerns or questions do you have that I (the teacher) need to know?

What suggestions do you have?
